Coronavirus: current information concerning in-person courses

Dear lecturers,

As you have surely read in the e-mail from the Rector, we again find ourselves in a more difficult situation because of coronavirus. We are doing everything we can to avoid another complete lockdown. Of course, we are dependent on your cooperation. Due to the new restrictions imposed by the Federal Council and the development of the epidemiological situation, the crisis management team and the University Executive Board have decided that there will also have to be some adjustments in teaching.

For example, only in-person events may only be held when a highly interactive component makes it necessary, i.e. seminars, internships, tutorials, or laboratory classes. In addition, a maximum of 60 students is allowed per class. For further information, please read the corresponding document on the website.

With Benny Wohlfarth, the University now also has an in-house physician who can advise you on the correct handling of positive coronavirus cases. Further information can also be found on the website.

Thank you in advance for your tremendous dedication and support.

Best regards,
Bruno Moretti, Vice-Rector for Teaching
