Intellectual Property and the Digital Economy

Semester: Fall semester- HS 2020

Root Number: 446688

ECTS: 3

Lecturers: Mira Burri, Thomas Cottier, Andreas Heinemann, Philippe Lionnet and Andreas Lobsiger (tbc)

Dates: 6 –11 July, 2020 (take-home assessment on July 11).

Location: In response to the COVID-19 pandemic and following the guidelines established by the University of Bern, all courses of the 2020 WTI Summer Academy will only be held online. This course will have live sessions on Zoom.

Addressees

The summer academy courses on IP and trade are of particular interests to student and professionals of the public and private sector interested to explore the linkages of international trade regulation and intellectual property protection in greater detail. While the first week offers foundations and well established areas in law and policy, such as access to essential drugs, the second week turn to new challenges in the digital age, many of them yet unresolved. The two weeks can be followed independently. As the second week build upon the first one, newcomers to the area of IP are recommended to take the first week and add, optionally, the second module.

Course Description

This model is dedicated to exploring the relationship of international trade, intellectual property and competition law in the digital economy. Expounding the law of copyright and domain name protection, it builds upon the first module, but then turns to new challenges in the field of competition law. New and unresolved issues of big data, data protection, artificial intelligence and IP protected technical standards are discussed, also in relation to the US-Sino trade war. The module also includes treatment of enforcing intellectual property rights which is particularly challenges in digital trade. The course is taught by leading academics and experienced practioners and Swiss government officials.

Topic: Copyright Law & Copyright in the Digital Economy

Digital technologies and the Internet in particular have triggered disruptive changes in long-established modes of creating, distributing and using works, ranging from literature and music to scientific publications and computer software. International and national copyright law has adapted, at least partially, in an attempt to reflect these changes. Yet, the jury is still out on whether these changes are appropriate and there is an intense ongoing debate on the proper scope of copyright and the means of its enforcement in the digital space. On the one side, there are strong voices, especially from the entertainment industries, that claim that the digital revolution has seriously undermined copyright protection that is essential to encourage the creation and distribution of new works. On the counter side, there are those who believe that strong and ever stronger copyright protection in fact inhibits technological innovation, hampers creativity and chills freedom of expression. It is the purpose of these two days to clarify the stakes in this debate and thematize the challenges that stand before policy- and rule-makers in the field of digital copyright law.

Day One will first provide an introduction into the basics of copyright by introducing the international legal framework and looking at the law and practice of selected national jurisdictions, in particular the US and the EU. Building upon this fundament, the course participants will be introduced to the specific features and the implications of digital media for copyright law. The course will then trace legal adaptation through changes in the legal systems, both national and international and through changes in the jurisprudence. We will use contemporary developments, such as the Google Books case and the Creative Commons licence, and discuss key questions on the liability of Internet intermediaries, so as to understand the current state of global copyright law and the challenges it faces.
